1. Introduction

History

The Bay of Cadiz is in the southern tip of the Iberian Peninsula and on Spain's Atlantic coast. The area is noted for its unrivalled quality of light.

This group of seven municipalities is an ideal year-round tourist destination thanks to its strategic location, its glorious climate, with more than 300 days of sun a year, its beaches and natural parks, its history and cultural wealth, its cuisine and its famous wines, the friendly and welcoming local residents, its traditions and festivities, along with the quality of its service infrastructure.

Climate

The climate of the Bay of Cadiz reflects its geographical situation straddled between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic. The average annual temperature, calculated over a 27-year period is 18.1 °C, which is typical of the Mediterranean region. The average maximum temperature is in August (34.7°C), while the minimum is in January (9.9°C). The annual rainfall is 603.77mm, which is typical of the southern Atlantic climate, with a total absence of snow.

Heritage

Two major periods are reflected in the wealth of the artistic, historical and archaeological heritage of the Bay of Cadiz. The first period includes the Phoenicians, Romans and Arabs who settled here, and the provincial capital has the honour of being the oldest city in Western Europe. The unique architectural skyline of the cities around the bay dates back Baroque era and the eighteenth century. Apart from the numerous different monuments and archaeological sites, the heritage is also showcased at the many different museums. There are a total of 22 museums where, on the one hand, magnificent examples of the archaeological wealth are on display and, on the other hand, the visitor can discover more about the region's flagship activities, such as sherry or the ship-building industry. The towns boast more than 100 historical religious, civil or military buildings and a series of forts, dating back to the 18th and 19th centuries, which bear witness to the important role that the Bay has played in history.

Cuisine

The cuisine of the Bay of Cadiz, as is to be expected, reflects the influences of the different cultures to be found here since time immemorial. The coast boasts a wide range of fish dishes, prepared using local produce and which are continuously updated in line with the latest trends.

Wine is one of the items that can best reflect the culture of a people. The landscape, the urban development, the festivities or the gastronomy of those places where wine-making has been a traditional activity are greatly determined by this culture that is so deeply rooted in Mediterranean countries.

The horse

Along with the bull and wine, it forms an iconic trilogy that reflects what this land is and its roots that are deeply entrenched in the countryside and agriculture.

The Bay of Cadiz, and particularly Jerez, has been famous for its first-rate horses since the 18th century when the Cartesian monks began to breed the Cartesian horse: a breed that is unique in the world.

The tourist potential of this sector is steadily increasing and expanding. Jerez and the surrounding areas have strongly developed this potential and offer a wide range of activities in many different settings: vineyards, ravines, paths, mountains and gorges, hacking, variety of horse riding classes at different levels, which use the first-rate private and public infrastructures available.

Festivities and traditions

The extrovert and happy nature of the local inhabitants along with the truly extraordinary climate of the Bay of Cadiz (warm in summer and mild in winter) are key factors to understanding the raison d'être of each and every one of its festivities, fairs and popular pilgrimages that take place here throughout the year.

The Bay of Cadiz offers many and varied leisure opportunities with its festivities, fairs and traditions, and the local residents travel to the neighbouring towns depending on the time of the year and their preferences.

The year begins with the nativity scenes and the typical zambombás of the Jerez Christmas and continues in February with the famous carnivals of Cadiz. Holy Week processions are celebrated in all the towns and villages around the Bay and are followed by the Spring Fairs one after another between April and June. The summer is noted for the local festivals, concerts, bull-fighting in El Puerto, to name just a few, and the year ends with the autumn festivals in Jerez and the Urta Fair in Rota. Yet there is one tradition that is to be found everywhere and appears in the carols, saetas (Holy Week religious songs), pasodobles or rumbas or Sevillianas, and that all-pervading tradition is flamenco.

The Bay of Cadiz, a destination par excellence for the lovers of flamenco singing, dancing and guitar playing, is a real must on the routes to honour flamenco, the art that so typifies Andalusia.

Sports

The Bay of Cadiz is a magnificent setting for water sports. Its warm climate, the surrounding geographical setting, the local seafaring tradition, along with the prevailing weather conditions, make this a particularly ideal sport for dinghy sailing and yachting, fishing or even just for a boat trip along the coast.

The proximity to the Straits of Gibraltar is the reason for the prevailing westerly (poniente) and easterly (levante) winds, which are perfect for traditional dinghy sailing or the latest trends, such as kite-surfing. Yet as the bay is sheltered from these prevailing winds, there is always less swell than out at sea or along the exposed coasts. This makes it a perfect location for beginners and more experienced sailors alike to enjoy their favourite sport.

The range of golfing opportunities around the Bay of Cadiz is also noteworthy, as it is an incentive that attracts thousands of European and Spanish players, eager to try out its internationally renowned golf courses of the ilk of Montecastillo Golf Resort and Sherry Golf in Jerez de la Frontera, Golf Meliá Sancti Petri and Golf Novo Sancti Petri A & B in Chiclana, Costa Ballena Club de Golf in Rota and Golf El Puerto, in El Puerto de Santa Maria.

Now if you want to fish, either from the shore or a boat, you will find a wealth of delightful spots depending on the type of fish you want to catch. The Bay of Cadiz is particularly famous among fishing cliques for its Corvina fish, snappers or sea bream, but you can also fish for rock fish (two-banded bream, white sea-bream, Mediterranean morays, conger eels, etc), along with gilthead breams, seabass and striped sea-bream to name just a few.

Or if you prefer motorboats, the Bay of Cadiz is not just a sought-after destination because of its tranquil waters, the good infrastructures or the beautiful spots along its coastline, but it is also an ideal anchorage halfway between the beaches of Huelva and the Straits of Gibraltar.

The numerous rocky outcrops in the Bay are perfect for underwater spearfishing and it also attracts many diving enthusiasts. Special mention should be made of the different archaeological sites around the city of Cadiz, which still boasts Phoenician and Roman remains, along with shipwrecks dating back to the West Indies Fleet and the Battle of Trafalgar.

Beach and natures

The more than 220,000 hectares of parks, beauty spots and natural reserves make the Bay of Cadiz one of the regions with the highest proportion of protected natural zones in Spain. Special mention should be made of the Bay of Cadiz Natural Park and the Marisma de Los Toruños y Pinar de la Algaida Metropolitan Park.

The Bay of Cadiz Natural Park is undoubtedly one of the most maritime protected natural spaces in Andalusia. And it is the cycle of the tides that takes the water in and out along the wide network of tidal channels into every last nook and cranny and which provides the lifeblood for this 10500-ha ecosystem.

These channels are the best way to discover the Natural Park, which is considered to be one of the most important wetlands in Spain, proof of which is its classification as a Special Protection Area for Birds (ZEPA), Place of Community Importance (LIC) and its inclusion in the Rasmus List of Wetlands of International Importance.

Around 100,000 birds of 64 different species delight those bird watchers that come here and discover its many wonders on a boat trip through the Bay of Cadiz and its channels. They can discover how the different fauna has adapted to the natural setting (molluscs, birds, fish) and how human being have likewise learnt to do so. A rich ethnological and cultural heritage (sea windmills, salt houses) has been created, the maximum exponent of which are the salt pans and the despesque or traditional estuary fishing.

And then of course, there is the rich military and naval heritage that is intrinsically linked to the sea: the Carraca arsenal, the Trocadero Island careening docks (18th century), the military defences of Sancti Petri channel and bay (Sancti Petri Castle, Urrutia or San Genis gun batteries, Puente Zuazo defences...).

The Marisa de Los Toruños y Pinar de La Algaida Metropolitan Park, run by the Autonomous Government of Andalusia through the Andalusian Land Public Company, has consolidated its position as the benchmark public space in the Metropolitan Area of the Bay of Cadiz. An ongoing programme of different activities and leisure and recreational services are organised for the general public.

The coastline of the Bay of Cadiz also boasts a large number of beaches, which total 45 km in length.

A total of 22 fine sandy beaches make up the Sun and Beach amenities of this Bay of Light, which have been awarded the European Blue Flags for the quality of its waters and the amenities that they offer their visitors.
